A SORROWFUL CLOSING.

With the games of to-day the baseball season of 1890 practically comes to an Large hands represent the aristocracy of in end. From causes which do not need dustry and the nobility of bonest labor. The again to be reviewed, the season has been one of continual quarelling and continual decline in interest; and as the campaign closes, the financial backers of the big leagues find themselves lighter in pocket, while their various teams can scarcely be credited with heavy additional honors. New York is out in the cold, so far as championships are concerned, but for all that championships really count for this year, when no arrangement has been made for a contest which will decisively place the world's pennant, the metropolis lias suffered little loss.

For next season it is promised that things shall all be changed—that there shall be a grand restoration of baseball, a par with the masculine club. with all the old laurels again in sight and all the hostilities of '90 dropped into his-

THE M'GONIGAL VERDICT.

There is always a sense of relief when the verdict which the public has passed upon some offense is justified by the twelve men who have carefully weighed the case and decided the culpability of the prisoner. This is so in the case of Dr. McGonigal, who has been convicted of manslaughter in the first degree.

THE EVENING WORLD has given so com plets an account of this celebrated case and has been so faithful in putting before its readers the proceedings in court during the trial that every intelligent person has been able to form a good judgment of the prisoner.

He is a deprayed, mercenary monster, whose wickedness is of a particularly revolting kind. The sentence will be awaited with interest.
